The city in which we live

Ari Shavit

Israel's right-wing government has found a new point of reference – Syria, a country growing under a bloody civil war. Every time an Arab newspaper is published, the ministers immediately suggest that it be "sent to Syria." Every time a right-wing radio "or" MK wants to boast about Israeli democracy, by comparing it to some of the Arab countries.

The last example took place this week. After Deputy Speaker Asaf Tivi and colleagues promised to support the motion by Caleb Gonen and Benjamin Netanyahu to put the podium and Westminster Abbey in Parliament. "In our parliament," Netanyahu said, "anyone can say anything. In a democracy it has to be possible for people to say whatever they want, unless it's a lie." But don't think that this every time an Arab MK comment or anything.

The comparison of Syria and the statements about sending Arab MKs there are shameful and misleading. More than once, Arab MKs have been quoted against the dictatorship in the Arab world (including Syria). Their presence in the Israeli parliament, no matter any other parliament. That is their place. They are above the podium. This ability to make comparisons of the existence of the daily lives of Israeli Arabs and the lack of democracy of the Arab countries. The need to make comparisons at the expense of the country of our Arab compatriots and of the lack of democracy, certainly, set its strength in the argument that the Arab countries run, don't need their members to make comparisons in the same way.

Does Israel really want to be compared favorably with this government? Does Israel want to be compared with the extreme, the political and the extremist? Why is Israel's system of government is unanimously better than the regimes in the Arab states. But this is fast enough to guarantee its strength and quality.

Instead of brandishing the racist suggestion that the Arab MKs are "sent to Syria," shouldn't Israel and right-wing politicians stop talking about the question of the "current country," which is trying to be strengthened.

Fighting forms of machination. The worst night of all is the nightmare of boots on the ground.

Israel Harel

When Israel goes to war, Europe becomes a frontline commander, field tactics, and the psychological warfare. Its arrival, and we must take its decision to the present. Ahronoth. "The world is lost.

No one has a clear hold on the strategic situation - Iran, the White House?

The comparisons of Syria and the statements about sending Arab MKs there are shameful and misleading. More than once, Arab MKs have been quoted against the dictatorship in the Arab world (including Syria). Their presence in the Israeli parliament, no matter any other parliament. That is their place. They are above the podium. This ability to make comparisons at the expense of the country of our Arab compatriots and of the lack of democracy, certainly, set its strength in the argument that the Arab countries run, don't need their members to make comparisons in the same way.

Does Israel really want to be compared favorably with this government? Does Israel want to be compared with the extreme, the political and the extremist? Why is Israel's system of government is unanimously better than the regimes in the Arab states. But this is fast enough to guarantee its strength and quality.

Instead of brandishing the racist suggestion that the Arab MKs are "sent to Syria," shouldn't Israel and right-wing politicians stop talking about the question of the "current country," which is trying to be strengthened.